Following his Brother John's assassination, on November 22, 1963, Kennedy continued to serve as the Attorney General under President Lyndon B. Johnson for nine months. There long had been bad blood between them, so in September 1964 Kennedy resigned to seek a U.S. Senate seat from New York, which he won in November. Within a few years he publicly split with Johnson over the Vietnam War.

In March 1968 Kennedy began a campaign for the presidency and was a front-running candidate of the Democratic Party, appealing especially to black, Hispanic and Catholic voters. In the California presidential primary, on June 4, Kennedy defeated Eugene McCarthy, the hero of the New Left and student elements in the Democratic Party. That night Kennedy was shot by Sirhan Sirhan, a Palestinian Arab.^[1] Mortally wounded, he survived nearly 26 hours, then died early in the morning of June 6.

“They kill Kennedys in America”

Ted Sorensen:

Do you agree with the conclusion of the Warren Commission that a lone assassin killed Pres. Kennedy?

I examine that question and I conclude that as flawed as the Warren Commission might have been to get a report out in time to calm and quiet the country, there has never been any worthy, credible evidence that would stand up for me as a lawyer in court proving that there was any conspiracy or anyone else behind the lone gunman who turned out to be a lucky sharpshooter.

After fifty years of examination the guilt that Persons, Organization, or Nations that in fact planned, and accomplished the Public Assassination of President John F. Kennedy of The United States Of America, today, as yesterday, remains unnamed and unknown.

If he had lived that day in Dallas, President Kennedy would now be ninety-six years old.

It Is Time To Bring To A Close The Search Of Finding The Truth Of Who Was Responsible For This Heinous Attack On The Nation And The Kennedy Family.

The President, Along With Brother Robert Francis Kennedy, Now Belong To the Ages, As Son, Husband, Father, Brother, And President And Should Be Seen Now As A Man That Died Defending Many of the Tenets and values of His Catholic Faith
